Proven Results.

Move Forward with Confidence.

The most successful listing agents know the critical importance of protecting their sellers from unnecessary delays, price reduction or repair costs associated with radon. Immediately upon listing the property, they'll discuss radon with the seller and explain that a buyer will likely request a radon test be conducted as part of due diligence.

Protect Your Clients.

Radon tests conducted with cheap devices can yield false positives, leading to seller anxiety and remorse caused by:

- Uncertainty and confusion about what to do next
- Questions over whether another test is warranted
- Concerns over the reliability of the home inspector's device
- Indecision and delays while additional testing is conducted
- Increased costs incurred simply to resolve "buyer mistrust" and concerns over potential test interference

The Trusted Testing Solution.

A certified radon test report from Radalink is the most trusted in the industry because all instruments are owned, serviced and calibrated by Radalink — not left to the home inspector. This certification ensures that the inspector cannot access or alter any data produced by the instrument, and reports are published in a locked PDF file that cannot be altered.
